the position which they occupy as the first THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY 37 works of the classic school the school which was to flourish almost unchallenged in France for nearly years makes them historically important, and from this point of view the principal thing to emphasise is the fact that, in their simplicity of subject and treatment, the extremely limited range of the characters, their preservation of the unities of plot, time, and place, their entire repudiation of Rouge argile (LITTERATUR) (French Edition) on the stage, the highly rhetorical quality of their dialogue, and their use of a regular chorus, they reproduce all the structural features of the Senecan drama on which they are modelled.
